

Acknowledgments

Writing this book has been a long but fun and interesting process. It is based on my doctoral dissertation and I wrote it during the first two years of my postdoctoral research, so its publication is both the best conclusion of my Ph.D. and –hopefully –the first step of my academic career.

My thanks go, first and foremost, to my Ph.D. adviser, Nabil Echchaibi, who is not only a brilliant mind but also a kind and compassionate person who pushed me to become the best scholar I could be. I would like to thank also the members of my dissertation committee: Stewart Hoover, the example of how extremely smart scholars can also be supportive and caring; Shu-Ling Chen Berggreen, who has been for me a wonderful mentor and a friend; Michela Ardizzone, a strong and passionate professor who is a constant inspiration; Peter Simonson, who is an intellectual guide and whose refined rhetoric I will never end to admire. I am also very grateful to Janice Peck, Andrew Calabrese, Paul Voakes and all the professors and graduate students at the College of Media, Communication and Information at the University of Colorado Boulder who have helped and inspired me during my Ph.D. A special mention goes to Martha LaForge, who has always been there for graduate students in any way possible.

I would also like to thank all the members of the Center for Media, Religion and Culture at the University of Colorado Boulder for providing me with an intellectually challenging and friendly environment to conduct my research. I thank Krissy Peterson for being such a smart and wonderful friend, and Samira Rajabi for always inspiring me with her strength. Thanks to Susanne Stadlbauer, who has been my friend and colleague in both Colorado and Germany. I would like to mention in particular also Deborah Whitehead, Art Bamford, Ryan Bartlett, Patrick Johnson, Rachel Liberman, William Ramsey, Nathan Schneider, Brad Breiten, Henrik Reintoft Christensen, Laurens de Rooij, Brooke Edge, Ahammed Junaid, Raoof Mir, Jin Kyu Park, Fazlul Rahman, Lei Su, Sara Souza, Adriana do Amaral, Hugo Cordova. I thank Seung Soo Kim, Rianne Subijanto, Ashmi Desai for supporting me until the end, when I defended my dissertation. My Ph.D. was particularly pleasant thanks to Megan Hurson and Tyler Rollins, the best cohort I could have hoped for. Special thanks to Lynn Schofield Clark, who is the first person that suggested me to apply to CU Boulder for my Ph.D. and has been an inspiration ever since.

Furthermore, I would like to thank my friends and colleagues from the Center for Religious Studies at Ruhr University, which was my intellectual home while writing this book. Thanks to Volkhard Krech, Alexandra Cuffel and Kianoosh Rezania for providing a great leadership to the Käte Hamburger Kolleg (KHK) project I am part of. I would like to mention my KHK colleagues Tim Karis, Jessie Pons, Eduard Iricinschi, Licia Di Giacinto, Knut Martin Stünkel. I also thank my media and religion people, in particular Frederik Elwert, Anna Neumaier, Samira Tabti. I would like to thank in particular Adam Knobler, who edited my book and was the first person to read the full manuscript.

I am grateful for support and feedback of the editors of the Routledge Studies in Religion and Digital Culture: Mia Lövheim, Heidi Campbell, and Gregory Price Grieve, three scholars whose work I greatly admire. Warm thanks also to everyone at Routledge, especially Joshua Wells and Jack Boothroyd for working on my manuscript. I also appreciate the suggestions of the anonymous reviewers who read my book proposal. I am grateful to family and friends in Italy, Germany, the U.S. and all over the world for believing in me. To all the people that accepted to be interviewed for this book and helped me with my research: thank you for blogging your religion.

The most special thanks to Mauro. Writing this book often meant to be apart, but also getting closer to the moment we can be together.
